

Media Content Producer

Cliff College, located in the Peak District, has been training people in evangelism and mission since 1903. Today it continues in its mission to equip the church in evangelism and mission through a range of undergraduate and postgraduate programmes, a wide selection of short courses, an annual Festival, partnerships with other institutions globally and churches locally and a busy conference centre and leisure business.

Cliff is at an exciting place in its history as it is about to launch Vision 21, a strategy that takes the College on a journey to become a global centre of evangelism and mission. This builds on its tradition and history and focuses on the College as a place of engagement, encounter and equipping.

As part of this strategy, Cliff College is seeking to expand our learning innovation team to enhance the support of IT across the College and to play a key role in the development and implementation of online and hybrid learning opportunities. Working alongside existing team members, two new full-time posts (an IT Support Officer and this Media Content Producer) will also contribute to the successful delivery of other projects, including the College's annual festival which has developed an online stream over the last two years.

For this role we are looking for someone who:

- has good understanding and experience of media content production
- is willing to develop and implement new ways of working
- has a passion for digital engagement
- is a great team player
- is willing to play a key role in the life of Cliff College
